Master Organization Studies

What happens when people have to work together to achieve common goals within and between organizations? What factors influence and what can be done to improve cooperation between people and organizations? What roles do networks, teams and strategy play in this process? If you want to learn about the key theories and develop expertise and the analytical capacity to deal with these crucial questions in the management of a wide range of organizations, this is your program to choose!

Organizations today are confronted with continuous change in their environments and they face ever more complex tasks and conflicting external demands, which leads to greater problems of coordination. The aim of the Master's program is to develop the key skills required to analyze and understand how these coordination problems are handled within organizations and organizational networks.

Prof. Leon Oerlemans

Professor Organizational Dynamics,
Extraordinary Professor of Economics and
Innovation at the University of Pretoria,
South Africa

"If you want to be challenged intellectually and would like to find out about the various ways of examining the organizational world, this MSc is the right program for you. The Master's program in Organization Studies aims to train professionals who will understand the role and management of complex modern organizations. The program combines training in theory and methods of organization science, the study of coordination, collaboration, organization, and empirical research on organizational phenomena."

CAREER PERSPECTIVE

The Master's program Organization Studies prepares students for management positions in the public and private sectors as well as for careers in research and consultancy. There are excellent opportunities for graduates who wish to pursue positions such as policy advisor, management consultant, human resource manager and quality project manager, to name a few. Graduates have pursued careers with national and international consulting companies such as Berenschot or Accenture, with organizations in the public and semipublic sectors in the Netherlands or large multi-national companies such as Philips or KPN.
